Sunlighten Infrared Sauna

Leading health and wellness experts agree on the wide-ranging benefits of infrared saunas. When used for detoxification, the average person in a conventional sauna sweats out 3% toxins and 97% water. In a Sunlighten sauna, they sweat out 20% toxins, can burn 600 calories in a 40 minute session and heart rate, cardiac output and metabolic rate are all boosted. Unlike conventional saunas that use hot rocks or steam heat, Sunlighten uses Solocarbon® far infrared heat—the same healing energy that is released naturally by the sun. Infrared is part of the sun's invisible spectrum of light that has the ability to penetrate the human tissue. It heats the body directly increasing the core body temperature for a much deeper sweat. Sunlighten's units range from $1,899 to $10,499. Available at www.sunlighten.com.

Bocci 38 Chandelier

Bocci, committed to fostering designers, craftspeople, technicians and manufacturers, with the goal of creating striking consumer goods of the highest quality, has an eclectic lighting collection now grown to include custom chandeliers and cutting edge electrical components. Bocci 38, pictured here, is a re-exploration of a glass-making technique whereby air is pushed in and out of glass that is intermittently heated and cooled. Large glass spheres are blown and a multitude of white cavities are introduced, several of them deep enough to contain succulent and cacti plantings. There are also two or three lighting elements per large sphere. Electricity and suspension are achieved using stiff copper tubing, which is allowed to tangle and crinkle, seemingly without regard for gravity. Price $3,000-$5,000. Available at OLighting.com.
